It's helpful that you show how the RMI connects to the other initiatives especially since the publication of the CHRB was closely followed by investors. We will be looking to see how RMI compares and what we can learn from these benchmarks. It is important that we do not overburden the companies with many different tools and indices while still getting sufficient and relevant information that can allow for better investment decisions.

Investors would like to understand the impact that for example a leading company in the index has compared to its lower scoring peers. Also, the companies that score poorly – how bad are they compared to other companies that are not ranked by the index.

Investors use data from data providers and in different formats. Getting raw scores on specific indicators and guidance to understanding the scores and their implications would be helpful for further analysis.
